Vienna, July 14.

A Relation of the ceremonies observ'd at the Espousals of the most serene Archduchess Maria Anna of Austria, Queen of Portugal.

ON the 7th of this Month about 6 in the Afternoon, the Emperor, the Empress, the Empress Dowager, the Royal Bride of Portugal, and the Archduchesses, attended by their whole Courts, went to visit the Miraculous Image of our Lady of Beez, which is in the Cathedral of St. Stephen in this City; and after having dined there at the Litanies and other Prayers, to implore from Heaven a happy Voyage for the Royal Bride, they embark'd on the Danube for Clester Neubourg, 2 Leagues from hence, where the Ceremony of the Espousals was to be perform'd the Monday following.

Meanwhile it having been rumour'd abroad that that Princess was then going for Portugal, and would not return any more to Vienna, a multitude of People were got together at their coming out of the Church, and the Royal Bride permitted all of them that could crowd up to come near her without Distinction to kiss her Hand. All the Streets through which she pass'd were throng'd, and all the Windows fill'd with Spectators, who wish'd her a happy Voyage and all sorts of Happiness. The Grief which the People express'd at parting with a Princess so much beloved, shew'd the Constancy of the Royal Bride, who mix'd her Tears with theirs, being often seen to weep, as she bow'd her Head to the People on either side out of the Coach.

They arriv'd at Clester Neubourg the same Evening, being preceeded by the Ambassador of Portugal, and some of his Train, the rest having been sent before with his Baggage, and after having sup'd together, their Imperial Majesties, the Royal Bride, and the Archduchesses retir'd into the Apartments that were fitt'd up for them in the Convent of the Regular Canons of St. Augustin, which was founded by Leopold, Margrave of Austria. The Day following, being Sunday, was almost intirely spent in Devotion, according to the Piety which is innate and hereditary to this Court. Meanwhile tho' the Weather was very rainy, and the Ways very bad, so innumerable a Crowd of People came to Clester Neubourg, that no Conveniences could be found for them for Money. The Monday Morning following all the Court perform'd their Devotions with exemplary Piety, in the Chappel of the abovemention'd St. Leopold, which is in the Church of the aforesaid Canons Regular, where the Relicks of that Saint are preserv'd: From thence they went to Dinner, after which the Ambassador of Portugal was admitted to a private Audience.

About 6 in the Evening, the Relicks of the abovemention'd St. Leopold and of other Saints being plac'd upon an Altar which is in the middle of the Church next the Chioce, the Cardinal of Saxe-Zeyis came thither dress'd in Pontifical Habits, he being appointed to perform the Ceremony with the assistance of two Bishops, two Miter'd Abbots and a great Number of Deacons and Sub-

Deacons. Soon after the whole Imperial Court enter'd into the Church in this Manner; After the Empress the Royal Bride between the two Empresses, then the Archduchesses, the present Emperor's Daughters, and after them the two other Archduchesses, sisters of the Royal Bride. After all who were present had made a Reverence to the Altar, and then to their Imperial Majesties, they took their respective Places; and the Emperor was Seated on the one of the Steps of the Altar at the Cornu Evangelii; and the Royal Bride on the other at the Cornu Epistole. The Emperor was cloath'd in a Mantle of Needle-work of Gold, and the Royal Bride in a Robe of Needle-work of Silver, studded with Jewels, and her Head-dire was so disposed, and adorn'd with Jewels, as to form the Royal Crown of Portugal. The Empresses, the Archduchesses, and all the Attendants were likewise in magnificent and costly Habits. The Cardinal of Saxe Zeyis turning towards the People, read aloud the Pope's Dispensation, and then the Refendary Pleckner read aloud likewise in the Latin Tongue the King of Portugal's Letter of Procuration, wherein he desir'd the Emperor to assist as his Proxy at the Espousals. This done, as well the Emperor as the Royal Bride kneel'd down on the steps of the Altar, and then the Cardinal betroth'd them according to the usual Ceremonies observ'd in the Romish Church, sprinkling them with Holy Water. After which he began the Te Deum which was sung to Musick, with Kettle-Drums, Trumpets, and other Instruments, under a noble Salvo of 36 Pieces of Cannon which were brought thither on purpose, and of a great Number of small-Arms, that were post'd in the Square before the Church. The Ambassador of Portugal stood all the while behind the Royal Bride, with the Emperor's great Chamberlain, and the Empress Dowager's Master of the Household. When the Te Deum was ended, the Cardinal gave the Benediction, and then the Emperor and the Empresses wish'd the Queen Joy, who fell on her Knees and wept. Next came the two Archduchesses, the Emperor's Daughters, and the two others, the Queen's Sisters, to wish her Joy likewise, and her Majesty embrac'd and kiss'd each of them. Then the Ambassador of Portugal complimented her on her Marriage, as did after him the Emperor's Great Chamberlain, and the Empress Dowager's Master of the Household: and after them all the Ladies of the Court, the Ministers and other Gentlemen. This done, the Emperor walk'd to the Door of the Church, and the Queen between the two Empresses follow'd him, giving as she went along her Hand to kiss, to several Ladies, who made their Compliments to her Majesty. Thus accompany'd by their Imperial Majesties, and by the Archduchesses attended by their whole Courts, the Queen went into her Coach, with the Countess della Torre, her Groom of the Stole, and the whole Court retir'd to their Apartments, leaving her Majesty to pursue her Journey by the Way of Cornelbourg, a small League from Clester Neubourg, whither she went that Evening, being preceeded by the Ambassador of Portugal in a Coach drawn by 6 Horses, whom the Queen follow'd in her own Coach, 4 Pages and as many Footmen

Footmen in the Emperour's Livery riding on each side of it. Afterwards came another of her Coaches with the Ladies of her Retinue, and then other Coaches with the rest of the Attendants of her Majesty and of the Ambassador. After them came 150 Soldiers of the Garrison of Vienna, whom his Imperial Maj: st: gave her for her Guard. In this Manner she arriv'd at Cornelbourg, from whence she is to pursue her Journey to Holland, where she is to embark for Portugal.
